3. Simpradons Price.

And the sale was over, not extantly however, for it remained for the commission of 182,000 to the price in had paid, when the Rembrandt treasure was his. To folk of moderate means and to those who must count their pennics, it seems a stupendous illustration of the traverse of the common of the traverse was an an and will pay so vast a sum for a painting, not every large at that—it is only twenty-three inches high by hirty wide. But more one of the steps of the a it sittle, there is the mystic testering. The summan dependence of the steps of the a it sittle, there is the mystic testering. The moderate remains much to lovers of art. Perhaps the painting itself means more, for it is very beautiful. It represents Eathabelan and the provided in the painting itself means more, for it is very beautiful. It represents Eathabelan and the provided in the painting itself means more, for it is very beautiful. It represents Eathabelan and the provided in the painting with the price fairly make on the folking on the terrace.

Beautiful, very but the price fairly makes one gas, and king David is pictured at and King David is pictured at another strendant is at work on the large of over half a century with the lapse of over half a century wit Awhile ago a woman whose purse is very, very slender and who never has known the meaning of "plunging." even in the mildest kind of way, went out to buy a pair of shoes. Nover in her whole lifetime had she enjoyed the luxury of a well-made, well-fitting pair, and she promised herself that for once she would stee over the line of prudence and he really extravagant. And she was-for her. She paid the whole of $2 upon that gala occasion, and in commenting upon her recklessancies, she said they were expensive shoes, and she must lupon her recklessancies, she said they were expensive shoes, and she must lupon her recklessancies, she said they were expensive shoes, and she must last, you know, readily, to make them just, you know, readily, to make them yellow the she with a bit of cans in their make-up, wanted them made for a woman at the startling price-startling to some of us-of 155. And quite likely she did not reckon it extravagant at all. She wanted shoes with a bit of class in their make-up, wanted them made to her measure, and doubtless the price seemed reasonable enough for that, though they were for ordinary wear, unembellished with diamond heels and presty nothings.

Yes, women can be pretty extravagant when they like; but, after all, when men start out to bid for a bit of canvas with a well-anourh name attached, or for anything else that they very much wonten. Quite likely it is because they have more of the wherewithal for hid-ding, but they also have the taste.

As for average folk, it is well that they have a sense of humor or a sense of something else to keep them well hai-anced and very well satisfied indeed when they read of the extravagance of those whe are high up in the world of money.
